Fortune isn't just the name of a Detroit label that has become legendary. Fortune was THE label in Motown City, long before Detroit gave rise to the record company Motown Records. Between the late 1940s and the mid-1960s, great music was made and even greater records were produced at the small Fortune Studio, covering the country, rockabilly, rock 'n' roll, and R&B markets of the time. This second installment of the Fortune Records Label Story also features raw, down-to-earth rockabilly and intense rock 'n' roll, the kind that could only have been created in the small Fortune Studio. The classic Dig Everybody, Dig That Boogie by the legendary Roy Hall kicks things off right away!
Fortune had produced a number of legendary artists, such as Eddie Stapleton, Johnny Powers, Pete DeBree, Roy Hall, and Andre "Bacon Fat" Williams. Although the latter was primarily at home in the rhythm 'n' blues genre, he, too, couldn't resist recording fierce rock 'n' roll until the studio walls shook. A significant portion of the Fortune recordings - including those on the sub-labels Hi-Q and Strate 8 - were recorded with an in-house band, featuring a rotating lineup of musicians, in the small in-house studio attached to a record store.
Like its predecessor, BCD17787 "That'll Flat Git It! Vol. 55," this compilation is not nostalgia - it is a powerful document of a time when music was direct, loud and unapologetically real. It rocks from start to finish - and that's exactly what made Fortune, Hi-Q and Strate 8 legendary.
The CD includes a high-quality, 36-page, full-color booklet featuring numerous rare photos, illustrations, and a comprehensive history of the label, expertly written by Chicago music icon Bill Dahl.
